EXERPT Word Work

- Choose 20 words from the word list. All of these words are used in the first few chapters of this book.
- In your journal, write the words you have chosen to sell at your word market. Write the definition of each chosen word.
- Think about how you would sort these at a market stall. They should be sorted just like fruits are sorted at the store! You get to decide which way to sort them. Some ideas are word length, part of speech, number of syllables, or by beginning letter. These are just examples. You may choose one of these or create a sort of your own.
- Once you have decided how to sort your chosen words, create a market stall display.
- We will share our market stalls and try to figure out how they were sorted.

EXERPT- Culminating Activity

*Now we come to a very tough decision. You can choose either Dictionopolis OR Digitopolis. You CANNOT visit both. Which do feel is more important- words or numbers? You will need to apply to visit. You won't get in unless you have a convincing argument as to why you belong in this place.

I choose to visit _____.

Here are 3 reasons why I feel words numbers (circle one!) are more important to the world.
